SATURDAY EVEN'G., SEPTEMBER 26.

[COMMUNICATED. THE FAREWELL WORD.

Yes! the farewell word is uttered, All those happy dreams are o'er, Memory's dearest chords are broken, They can gladden me no more; Then how vain are all the throbbings That are shrouded in a sigh, Vainer still the thought I cherished

'Twould grow brighter, by and by. Soon how soon each token perished With the love that once was mine, While in anxious dreams I fancied, Still, I clasped that hand of thine; Or I heard the voice whose accents Once the lonelist hour could cheer, Sweetest face 'round friendship's alter, Sweetest smiles to memory dear.

Never more! those smiles will grieve me. All of joy has turned to pain; Do not bid me hope; 'twere better, That we should not meet again; For, full well I knew thou'd smother Pledges registered on high-Thou would'st seek to banish sorrow When some other is nigh.

But ah! one little image will be Present day and night; One little face will tell thee of the Days which once were bright; Thou wilt seek in vain to banish What must oft remind of me, As those little hands are folded, And that face looks up to thee.

Oh! I do not like such parting,

Not a ray of comfort wafted, Or a kiss before 1 go; And I shudder now to write them, As I hear the cheerless echo. Of a sad, and last good bye!
